

Three of the trails start and finish at the Shalloch Park car park, at the south end of Girvan. The Girvan - Barr Hill Trail is a linear route. Go prepared for muddy ground and wet weather. Boots, or stout shoes, along with waterproofs are recommended. It is always advisable to take an Ordnance Survey map of the area with you, whenever you go walking in the hills, and to be competent at reading it.

over which general access rights are exercisable. Trails to Byrne Hill start at the Shallochpark car park, just south of Girvan. You can walk south along the recently formed footway at the side of the A77 and across the Myoch Bridge. Beyond the bridge you may cross the road, and access routes leading to the summit of the hill, which general access rights are exercisable.

Due to landownership issues, we cannot promote a specific route to the summit of Byrne Hill. However, the right of responsible access, under the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, applies in this area as it does throughout Scotland. Trails to Byrne Hill start at the Shallochpark car park, just south of Girvan. You can walk south along the recently formed footway at the side of the A77 and across the Myoch Bridge. Beyond the bridge you may cross the road, and access routes leading to the summit of the hill, which general access rights are exercisable.

Trails around Byrne Hill

11 miles / 17 km

Pinmore Trail

The distance involved makes this a challenging walk, but with plenty of points of interest it is certainly worth the effort.

Follow the good track between Sundown Valley and Dow Hill. This hill and moorland route branches off to Dalfask Farm and Pinmore. The route passes close to Dinvin Motte, reputed to be the finest prehistoric fort in Ayrshire and one of the best preserved mottes in Scotland. It is situated on a dominating ridge just north of Pinmore, and consists of a central mound defended by two well defined circular ramparts and ditches. Just below Dinvin is the 496 metres long Pinmore railway tunnel on the Girvan Stranraer line, built in 1877.

The route now lies from Pinmore down the quiet valley of the Water of Lendal.

On a rough moorland path the route skirts the Grey Hills, a wildlife reserve managed by the Scottish Wildlife Trust. Special features are patches of herb-rich turf situated on outcrops of Serpentine rock, only to be found in four other places in the British Isles. From the path you look down on Loch Lochton where there is a fine display of both white and yellow water lilies. There are magnificent views over the surrounding countryside on your return.

The dominant feature is Ailsa Craig. A volcanic plug thrusting over a thousand feet from the Firth of Clyde and silhouetted against the sky. The remains of a ruined castle can be seen on the island, which is now a bird sanctuary and one of the largest colonies of gannets in the British Isles. To complete the trail back, turn right at the A714 and follow the footpath back to the town.

The first part of the route follows the old right of way to Barr. Fine views are afforded of the Byne Hill and of the high road between the Carrick shore and the Assel and Stinchar Valleys. A mile further on is Laggan Loch, an almost perfectly circular Loch. Legend has it that the outline of a ploughman complete with yoke can be seen on the surface of the Loch. He was reputed to have been lost in mud at the bottom.

Crossing the drystone dyke the route continues on the track before branching right near the whaleback summit of Laggan Hill. This is an area which is still predominantly farmed for hill cattle and sheep.

The first part of the route follows the old right of way to Barr. Fine views are afforded of the Byne Hill and of the high road between the Carrick shore and the Assel and Stinchar Valleys.

4.5 miles / 7 km

Laggan Trail

6 miles / 10 km

Girvan Barr Hill Trail

The trail follows the initial route of the Dow Hill and Laggan Trails. Past the loch the trail separates and drops down to Tormitchell via the ruins of Barbae Farm and the Water of Assel Valley.

A track leads to Dupin and then by footpath uphill over Auchensoul Hill (1029ft), which gives fine views over Barr and the beautiful Stinchar Valley.

The path emerges on the Old Dailly to Barr road known locally as "The Screws" before entering Barr via the old Stinchar Bridge built in 1787.

The conservation village of Barr is well worth a visit with its attractive rows of unspoilt 18th and 19th century vernacular buildings. The area has a considerable covenanting history and in the old churchyard there are two martyrs' stones. Further trails can be explored a mile east of the village in Changue Forest, where a car park with an information board is sited detailing the network of trails.

The trail is completed by descending South West to the railway line and along the footpath adjacent to the main road. After a rest from this short excursion the local town is well worth a visit. Girvan is a traditional Clyde Coast tourist and fishing town, its harbour is a centre of attraction for visitors with sea angling trips to Ailsa Craig. There are many interesting buildings including a townhouse tower built in 1789 known as "Stumpy Tower". Another imposing building is the McKechnie Institute, built in Scots Baronial style in 1888. It is now used as a local art and exhibition centre.

The trail is completed by descending South West to the railway line and along the footpath adjacent to the main road. After a rest from this short excursion the local town is well worth a visit. Girvan is a traditional Clyde Coast tourist and fishing town, its harbour is a centre of attraction for visitors with sea angling trips to Ailsa Craig. There are many interesting buildings including a townhouse tower built in 1789 known as "Stumpy Tower". Another imposing building is the McKechnie Institute, built in Scots Baronial style in 1888. It is now used as a local art and exhibition centre.

The trail is completed by descending South West to the railway line and along the footpath adjacent to the main road. After a rest from this short excursion the local town is well worth a visit. Girvan is a traditional Clyde Coast tourist and fishing town, its harbour is a centre of attraction for visitors with sea angling trips to Ailsa Craig. There are many interesting buildings including a townhouse tower built in 1789 known as "Stumpy Tower". Another imposing building is the McKechnie Institute, built in Scots Baronial style in 1888. It is now used as a local art and exhibition centre.

2.25 miles / 3.5 km

Dow Hill Trail

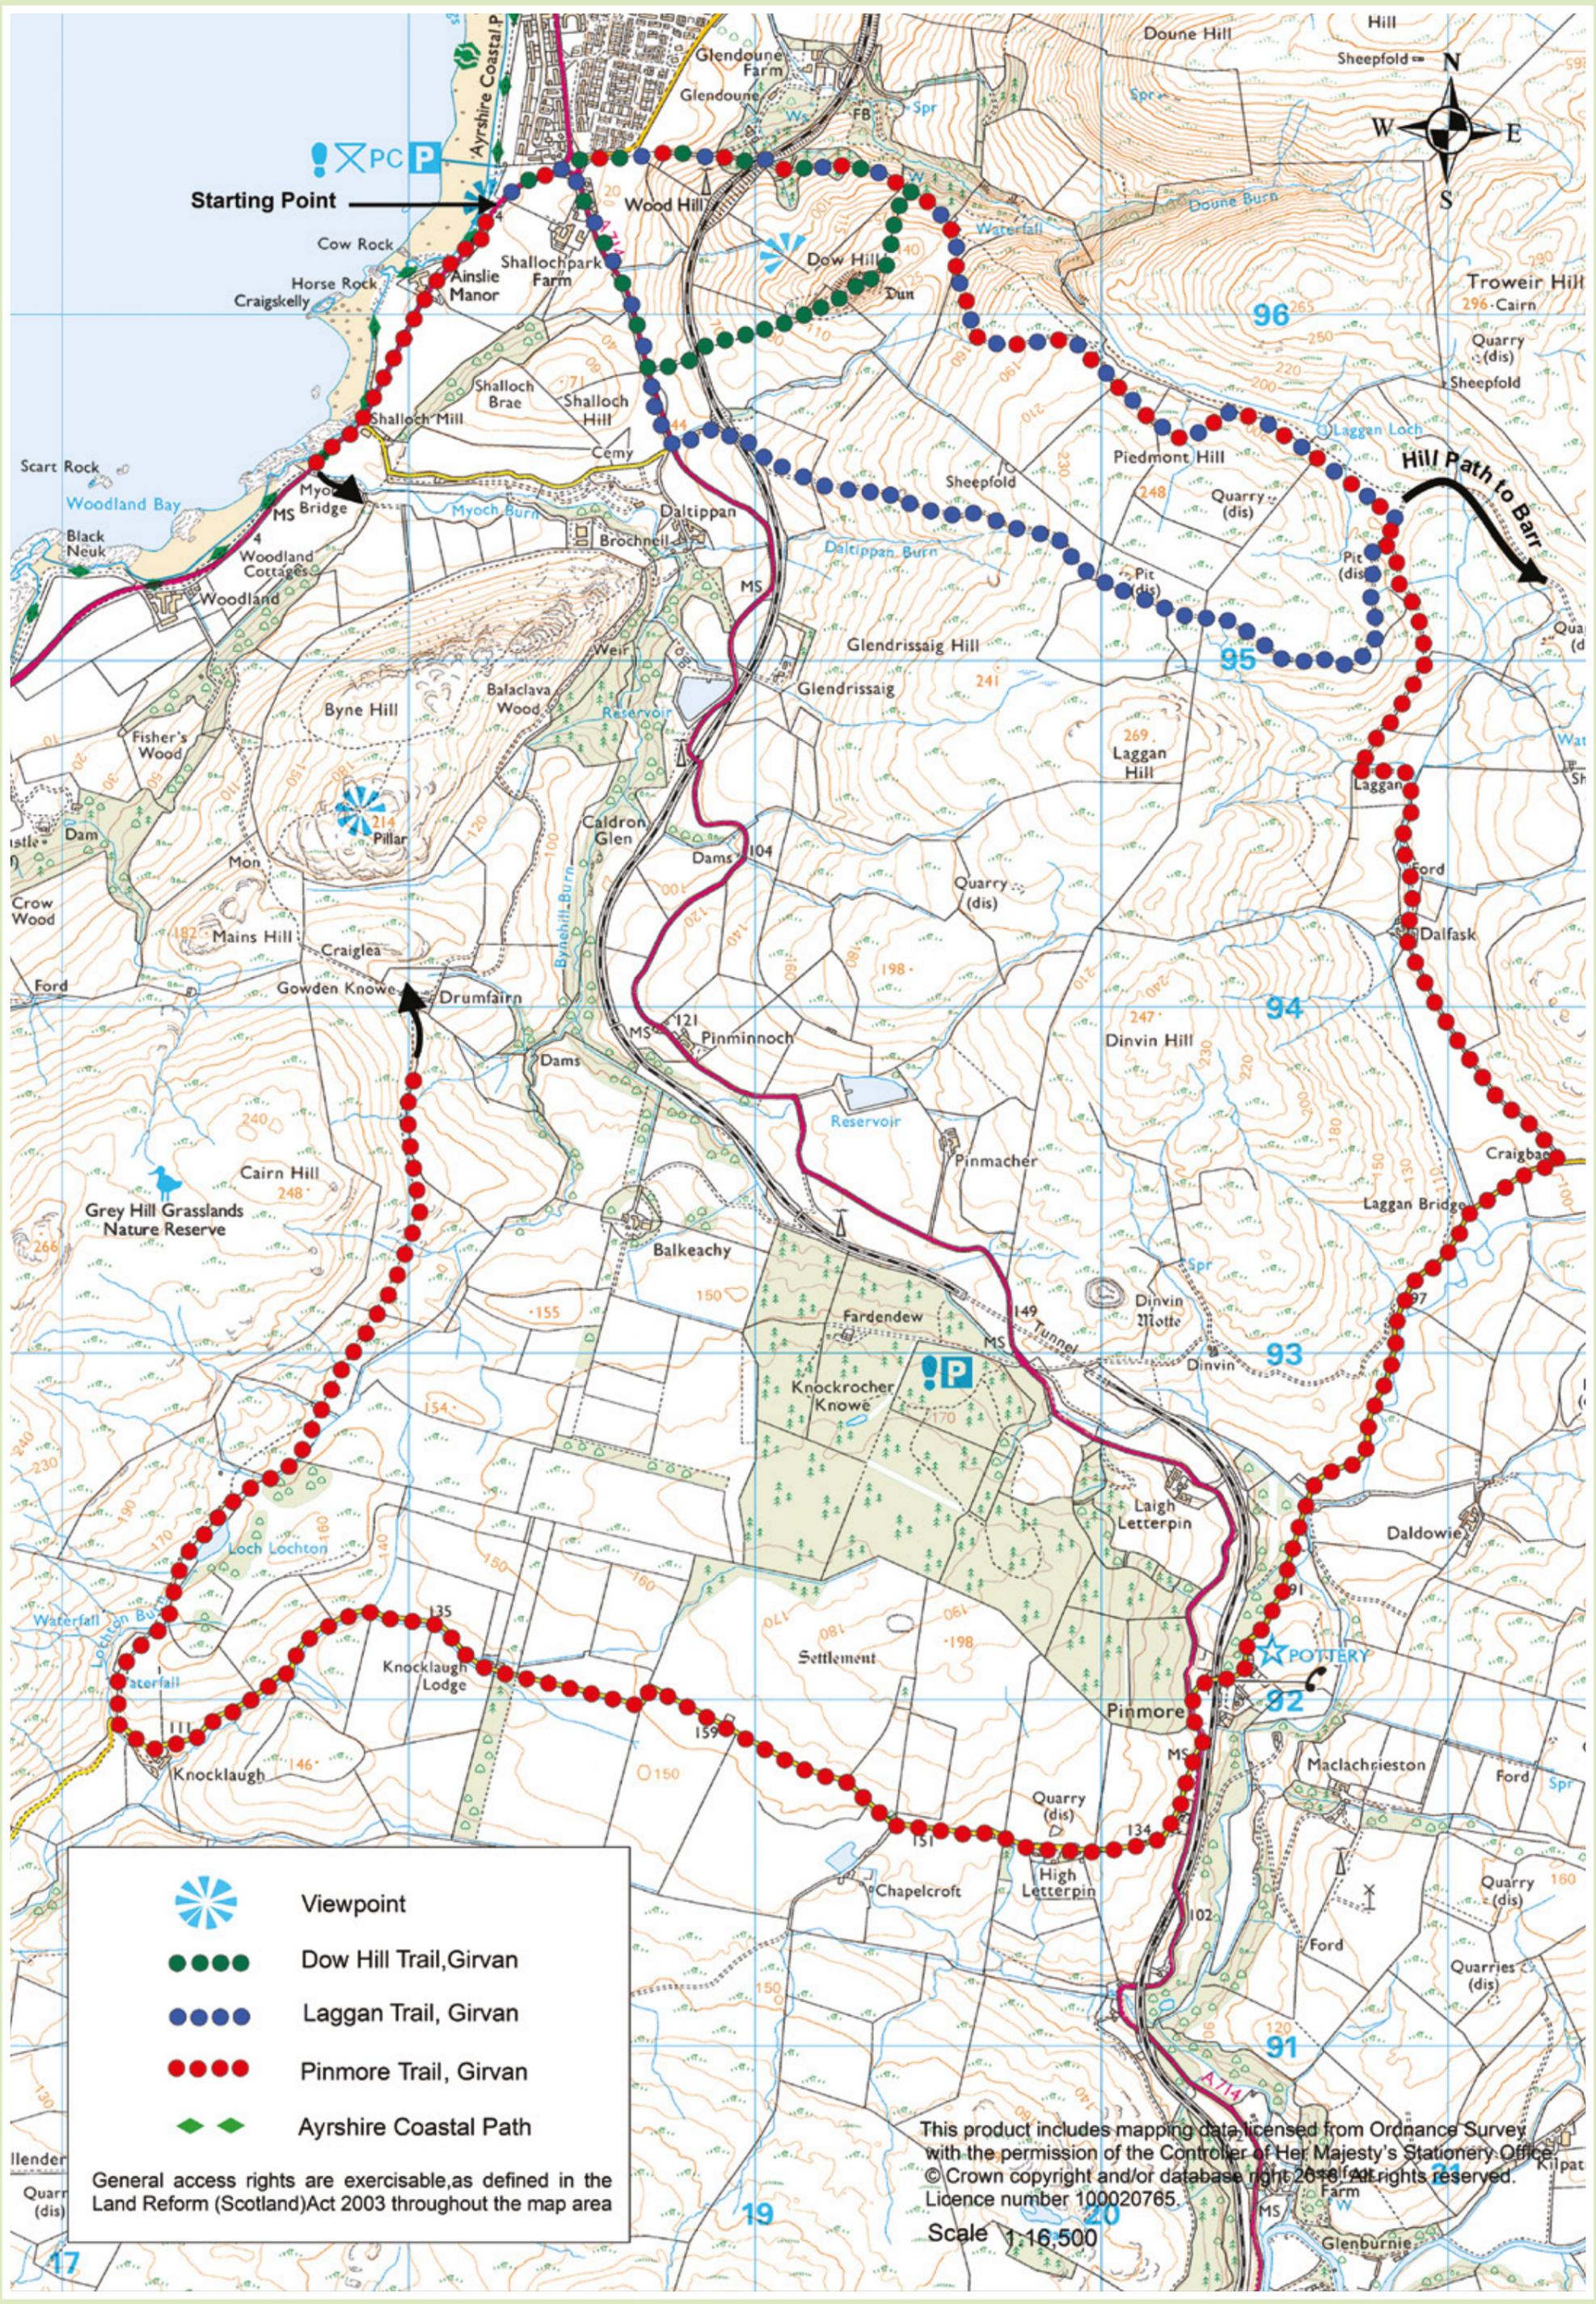

South Ayrshire Council

Girvan Trails

Map with routes inside...

Starting Point

Viewpoint

Dow Hill Trail, Girvan

Laggan Trail, Girvan

Pinmore Trail, Girvan

Ayrshire Coastal Path

General access rights are exercisable, as defined in the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 throughout the map area

This product includes mapping data, licensed from Ordnance Survey with the permission of the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationary Office. © Crown copyright and/or database right 2016. All rights reserved. Licence number 100020765.

Scale 1:16,500